I recently heard a 2nd Amendment activist say that there are around a million incidents each year in which guns are used for defense. I would imagine that most of these entailed a situation in which the very presence of the gun diffused what otherwise would have likely been a dangerous, if not lethal situation.

I've only heard a few stories in the news about a gun being used to defend life. Usually, the only gun stories are things like mass shootings, which are milked to paint guns as terrible.

I recommend that conservative news stations seek to air at least one positive gun story each day, to establish the value of having this method of defense/protection. This could include other defensive tools or methods.
