MAGA (Make America Great Again) general, Steven K. Bannon has a mantra that many of his compatriots repeat as well. It's posted on a plaque on the shelves behind him in his War Room, RAV TV set. "There are no conspiracies, but there are no coincidences."

I see that Mantra as hugely problematic.

There very definitely is a huge conspiracy to establish a world socialist/communist tyranny.

Pres. Trump coined the "deep state" moniker, which served to turn the tide in awareness of its existence. Because of a sufficient awakening and repentance of the people, he was able to rise to the Presidency, and the establishment's war against him woke millions to the conspiracy that has been controlling things for so long.

But Trump still is not fully aware of how globally entrenched the conspiracy is. He has the courage to call it out, which is more than can be said about many of the leading conservative voices.

One of the key strategies of the conspiracy, to allow them to advance mostly unobstructed, is to promote the lie that there is no conspiracy (eg.

"2020 was the most secure election ever," when the opposite was true, per Joe Biden's Freudian slip when on Oct. 24, 2020 he said, "We have put together the most extensive voter fraud organization in history.")

They have so stigmatized anyone who talks about conspiracies (perhaps foremost being Alex Jones) that even Steve Bannon shies away to a super indirect hint in his up-side-down mantra.

Just as the "silent majority" is obsolete, replaced by an invigorated and loud MAGA base, so also is shying away from calling out and overturning the conspiracy fizzling. Let's call it what it is, boldly, confidently, and with solid determination, undergirded by faith that with God we will prevail. (Ether 8:23-26, one of the most-cited references of Ezra Taft Benson, former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day, whose John Birch Society patriotism was sidelined as prophesied in Ezek. 33:31-33—whose cataclysmic conclusion we can avert by repenting as a people, as we are in process of doing in this great revival under way.)
