Berger Quote Approaches the Impact this Paradigm Will have on the World

This morning, Sgt. Berger (who posts 1-2 up-lifting quotes per day) posted this one that I found especially relevant to this quest I've been on.

"Talent hits a target no one else can hit. Genius hits a target no one else can see."

- Arthur Schopenhauer

This quote contrasts two levels of exceptional ability: talent and genius. Talent, according to him, is the ability to achieve what others cannot, ^{as well} to hit a target that's visible but difficult to reach. It's about skill, precision, and the mastery of a craft to a degree that sets one apart from the ~~merger~~ majority. Talented individuals excel within the boundaries of what is known and recognized. Genius, on the other hand, transcends this. It's about perceiving beyond the visible, tangible targets. Genius involves seeing what others can't even imagine, identifying possibilities and truths that lie beyond current understanding or conventional wisdom. It's not just about doing something better than others but doing something completely different, pioneering new paths and insights. So, while talent is about achieving greatness within the realms we know, genius is about exploring and unveiling the unknown, making the invisible visible. It's not just about being the best at what everyone else is doing; it's about doing something so unique, it changes the game entirely."

He didn't say who that quote is from (he surely does).

Now, to illustrate how transformational this paradigm I'm presenting will be (credit goes to God), remember this quote that I like to cite:

"He who is one step ahead is a genius; He who is two steps ahead is a crackpot."

- Rabbi Schlomo Riskin

My God-inspired paradigm is so advanced, there have been none to answer thus far, in a planet of 8 billion people, millions of them being amazing people.
