Postscript: 5 years later. Awesome synchronicity!

Yesterday, April 10, 2023, I was chatting with a fellow podmate (Bond), having my chair turned 180° to the back to my bed, which doubles as my desk. While talking, my writing packet (a hard/rigid surface; a folder with stuff I'm working on, fresh paper, some reference papers) somehow fell off my bed and spilled out when it hit the floor. I didn't realize that until I was done with the chat and turned my chair back around.

Seeing the spill of papers, I had the impression that there was a divine reason for it, and I expressed gratitude ahead of time for whatever that might be. These papers have been accumulating for years, and I thought it would be a good opportunity to go through them and file them away, or discard. It took nearly an hour.

One of the papers is the enclosed. It was the last paper in the right side set - hence all the crud stuck to the paper. Looking at it, I thought I should make a copy of it and mail it to Mary Young, who has been helping me for the last year (starting 4/19/2022). Today, as I handed the original to Officer Smith to copy, I had the impression that I should have Mary post it as a "I'd Coming.org" blog post, documenting this request I wrote years ago, which Mary is now helping materialize in a catalytic way.

<This line shows up from the copy machine when it's on the darkest setting for pencil originals.>

As I was preparing this for the blog this evening, adding the header, my by-line, and writing "2018" over the date, I realized for the first time that yesterday, when I found this piece, by the folder falling to the floor, was the five-year anniversary of when I wrote it. I love it! That's so like God, to work like that. Divine Design - affirmation of the divine guidance in what I'm doing - including divine appreciation of Mary stepping up to help me in such a significant way. ☺ p.s. When I ran this by Bond to read, he commented that things like this happen with him, too.
