In studying/learning about my own addiction, in my process of attaining tools to manage my own addiction, I came across what I would consider a truism: When a person gets sucked deep into their addiction, their soul is crying out for deliverance. This will spur them to get sloppy in concealing their problem, so that they'll get caught. Subconsciously, they want to get caught so that the downward spiral will be stopped. They're crying out for help.

Hunter Biden's recklessness in how he abandoned his highly incriminating laptop ^{three years ago,} ignoring attempts to get it back to him, bespeaks this phenomenon in archetypal manner. It screams of Hunter's wanting to get himself and his family caught so that this toxicity can be stopped.

He subconsciously is crying out for help.

We are doing him no favor by letting this corruption go even deeper. Let's do him and his Family a Favor by fully exposing and indicting this — and Forgiving them if they genuinely repent, exhibited by their taking all-in measures of their ^{investigation} to correct the mess they created.

At this point, the one least likely to repent is Joe, given the decades he's been quashing his conscience, giving in to the dark conspiratorial forces he's been aligned with.
But God will never stop extending the invitation for even the darkest conspirators to repent.
